Texas Home School Coalition PAC Endorses Ben Smith, 380th District Court Candidate

Smith, a resident of McKinney in Collin County, is a conservative Republican

LUBBOCK, TEXAS (April 23, 2012)—The Texas Home School Coalition Political Action Committee is pleased to announce its endorsement of Ben Smith, candidate for the 380th District Court in Collin County. The THSC PAC researches, endorses, and supports pro-homeschooling candidates. It is the political affiliate of the Texas Home School Coalition, the state advocacy organization for than 120,000 home schooling families in Texas.

“Ben Smith is a man of strong character and wisdom,” said Tim Lambert, president of the Texas Home School Coalition. “Throughout his career, he has demonstrated his respect for our country’s judicial system and his commitment to upholding the rights of Americans as defined by the U.S. Constitution.”

Members of the home school community in Texas work together to promote the benefits of home schooling and to protect the rights of parents who choose to educate their children at home.

“I am honored that the Texas Home School Coalition PAC would choose to endorse my candidacy for 380th District Court Judge,” Smith said. “I value the Coalition’s purpose and what home school parents are accomplishing on their children’s behalf.”

Smith has received the endorsements of the McKinney Police Association, the Frisco Police Association, the Collin County Deputies Association and the Collin County Conservative Republicans among other groups. He has also garnered the support of numerous community and conservative leaders including Cathie Adams, former chairman of the Texas GOP, James Ho, former solicitor general of Texas and B.J. Bjorklund, co-founder of the Frisco Tea Party. The Texas Primary will be held Tuesday, May 29. Early voting begins Monday, May 14 and continues through Friday, May 25.
